- The author has a great reputation throughout the world. He holds the Pope & Young World Record for Moose Hunting and is undoubtedly one of the best-known experts on the subject.

RÉAL LANGLOIS
AUTHOR

When it comes to moose hunting, Réal Langlois is one of the world's leading experts. For many years, hunters have been flocking to his conferences, eager to get tips that really work. Also known as The Rack Man, this passionate hunter has finally put down his crossbow and picked up a pen to share years of knowledge and experience on the art and science of moose hunting.

THE ULTIMATE GUIDE TO MOOSE HUNTING!

CHAPTER 4 - WIDE TO BENT

FLATTENED GRASS
 Moose are solitary animals, but they do sometimes be in herds. When you're out scouting an area, keep your eyes peeled for large areas of flattened or matted-up grass, as this could indicate an area recently occupied by one or several moose.

Before setting down in the grass, a moose will walk upward and then retrace his steps in a sweeping arc. This allows the moose to catch a warning scent from any potential predators. Experienced hunters know when they should cease following a moose's trail and head upward instead, in the hopes of catching their prey off guard.

CHAPTER 6 - SALT LICKS: THE ART OF PREPARING YOUR HUNTING GROUNDS

SALT LICKS
 One really important piece of advice when it comes to salt licks is this: if you decide to make one, make sure it's a good one! When it comes to moose, you're going to need lots and lots of salt. I've watched moose hunting videos where the natural salt licks cover more than 2 km<sup>2</sup> (0.8 mi<sup>2</sup>). Now that's quite the salt lick!

I own 90 hectares (222 acres) of land on which I built a 275-m<sup>2</sup> (329-yd<sup>2</sup>) salt lick. Each year, I install four or five salt blocks (red or white). Depending on where you hunt, you could also use blue salt blocks. I have to stress that I've never had any success using blue salt blocks on my land, but I know for a fact that they are very effective in other regions.

THE DIFFERENT TYPES OF SALT BLOCKS

WHITE BLOCKS: Natural salt blocks
RED BLOCKS: Iodized salt blocks
BLUE BLOCKS: Salt, iodine and cobalt blocks
RED-BROWN BLOCKS: Mineral blocks (salt, iodine, iron, copper, manganese, zinc or cobalt)

All my blocks are mounted on posts 1 m (3 ft) high so that the moose can easily access them. Moose have really long legs, so having to crouch down to get to food on the ground is both inconvenient and uncomfortable. Moose have a natural tendency to go for food that is higher up.

The smaller your hunting territory is, the more important salt licks are.

CHAPTER 8 - THE "RIGHT" WAY TO HUNT MOOSE

THE MOMENT THAT CHANGED IT ALL
 In September 1990, I was in the Magalloway controlled harvesting zone in Timiscamanga. It had been a cold, long night and the sun was just starting to stretch its first rays across the sky. It was 7:30 in the morning and I was nearing the end of my expedition. I was scheduled to leave the very next day and the panic was starting to set in: I was already picturing myself heading home empty handed. A few days prior, I had spotted tracks that appeared to belong to an imposing bull.

I was strolling through the area, taking in all its beauty, when I suddenly spotted Heaving my bow across my shoulder, I decided to do one final one of the forest, retracing my steps back to the area where I had seen those impressive tracks. The scenery was breathtaking: the trees aflame with colour. The sun was piercing the treetops, a sharp contrast to the layer of white frost covering the earth like a blanket.

I was strolling through the area, taking in all its beauty, when I suddenly spotted fresh tracks in the earth. Shaking myself from my reverie, I realized the tracks were a sure indication that a moose had recently passed through the area.
